9.9 Types of University Loan Funds

Policy Statement
The Bursar’s Office Division maintains and operates several different types of University loan funds.

Reason for policy
This policy is needed to inform potential student borrowers of the different types of University loans.

Procedures
The University of Georgia loan funds are comprised of two main types:

The University long-term loan program is comprised of institutional loan funds that can offer potential student borrowers and their co-applicants another option to help aid in the cost of attendance for their education and a lengthy repayment period. These loan funds were started by contributions and donations made by private and public donors.

The University short-term loan program is comprised of institutional loan funds that can offer potential student borrowers an option to assist them with small unexpected financial situations. These loans can be given after the first day of the current semester and must be paid back within the semester that they are given.
